What role do engineering firms play in offshore wind projects in China?

Engineering firms play a critical role in offshore wind projects in China. This is partially due to the cooperation model between power developers and the D&E firms in project approvals. The former relied on the “licensed” D&Es to provide project designs for project green-lights.

What is China's offshore wind development?

One of the unique phenomena in China’s offshore wind development is the central role of power design & engineering companies (D&E) in project development. For foreign companies that hope to make an inroad into China, it is critical to offshore wind and in the electricity market in general. But in offshore wind.

Which E&D institutes dominate the offshore wind market?

But three currently dominate the offshore wind market: Based in Hangzhou and established since 1954, ECIDI is one of the seven core E&D institutes under PowerChina Group—world’s largest power design, engineering, and research firm. These seven are known as the most capable E&Ds in hydraulic engineering, coming from a background of hydropower.

Who leads China's offshore wind demonstrator - Donghai Bridge?

Sidri set foot in offshore wind by leading China’s offshore wind demonstrator, the Donghai Bridge project developed by the Shanghai government in 2016. It has a strong tie with the municipality government and is a crucial player in the Shanghai government-lead demonstrative floating offshore demonstrator, too.
